SUBJECT: Security Council Informals on Rwanda, Thursday, April 28, 3:30 pm

RELEASED IN FULL

The Department and Interagency Core Group have been examining things the USG can do to help in Rwanda, particularly on the humanitarian side. They are also considering whether an arms embargo resolution would be helpful, but have not yet made a firm decision. They want to encourage cross-border assistance to refugees who are concentrated on the borders with Zaire, Uganda, Tanzania and Burundi. They are getting to the point where they acknowledge that the government forces have been the major perpetrators of the slaughter. Department officials have already told Rwandan "officials" that they must instruct the army and militias to stop killing civilians.

TALKING POINTS:

-- My government continues to be appalled by the level of violence and brutality that persists in Rwanda. We are examining various possibilities for lessening the agony in Rwanda.

-- One possibility that we have heard suggested by human rights groups is a Security Council-mandated arms embargo. We have heard allegations that the Rwandan army is actively seeking to buy arms at the moment. We have not yet finalized our position on this idea, and would be very eager to hear the opinions of other Council members of whether an embargo might be helpful.
